Sucker's First Visit to a Theater

Sporting.

A friend gives us an amusing account of his experience with a dog which he bought from a dealer on the assurance that he was "such a ratter." He had some trouble at first in getting an "aniline" upon which to try the pup's rattling propensities.

However, one day I was fortunate enough to secure from a boy in the market a fine old line, bob-tailed rat, whose furious desire to chew everything within reach gave promise of glorious sport for Nip. Took the rat home, called my dog, and told my wife that if she wanted to see the way ferriers did rats, to come down in the basement. She came down and shut the door—just in time, too; for, as soon as Nip saw the rat, he, Nip my ratter, for which I paid the old gent ten dollars, made most unmistakably cowardly movements toward the door. Wife, on a chair, said the dog did not appear to see the rat.

Told wife to keep her breath. Thought I would not give Nip any reason for not seeing the rat again, so I tied the string that held the rat to the dog's hind leg. He saw the rat, that time, and jumped on the chair by my wife. Wife laughed, and shoved him off. Tried the stove next. Got off the stove without being shooed. The rat, however, being an old stager, and not being used to such treatment, made a demonstration on Nip's rear; and I don't believe little "Flora Temple" ever made better time in the same limits than that dog and rat made around the room.

First heat, dog had the lead, closely followed by rat, who, on striking the half-mile pole (footstool in the corner) broke badly in fact, nearly broke his back, and before he could be brought down (he was sliding on his back), dog led him by whole length of string. Didn't stop for wind, but started on the second heat. Got off well together (tied) and went finely around, neck and tail, until they reached the judge's stand (wife standing on a chair), against which dog brought up solid, bringing the judge down in a style preeminently sudden, if not dignified. The heat was decidedly against the dog, you bet, and it was only after much persuasion that the judge would again take the stand.

The third heat may be amply termed a dead heat. They got off as well apart as the dog conveniently could, and shifted lively until just as they struck the last quarter, when the rat, which ran about as well on his back as his legs, shed the truck and got rather queerly around a table leg. Dog went on as far as the string and length of his hind leg would let him. On raising the rat he was found to be totally deficient—in fact dead. Nip was not much better off.

Wife said that dog couldn't kill a mice. Told her he had certainly killed that rat; but, on viewing the feat in a scientific light, I must confess that I did not feel quite satisfied with the performance of my pet, and the next morning gave him away to a milkman, who wanted a ratter to free his stable from the depredations of the vermin. I have not been able to ascertain which left him first, the rats or the dog.—[Ex.]

Tame Wolves.

A couple of tame wolves have been objects of curiosity in a yard on Mulberry street, for a few days past. They are very tame—so tame that they are "nicest play things in the world." On Saturday a gentleman went down to see them, and the lady of the house remarked to him that they were very tame. "Just see here," said she, and she fondled them as if they were innocent babes. "You put your hands upon them, and see how tame they are," she invitingly said to the gent. Of course he would, but, as he approached, four rows of teeth admonished him to keep a safe distance. At this, the woman assured him it was only a playful demonstration, and to show him how exceedingly well tamed they were, she entered the house and returned with three little kittens, which she placed before the wolves. Then she engaged in further conversation with the gent, and soon after, both hearing a faint squeak, turned around just in time to see the tail of kitten number three going down the mouth of the tame wolf. The visitor immediately took his departure, after making a liberal offer for the wolves, to take home for an infant child to play with in the absence of its mother.—[New Haven Journal.]

ONE OF THE FOURTH STREET BELLES.

She wore a Gothic waterfall, and hoops like a Sibley tent, and down her back, oh! slavery, a big chain clanked as she went. She bought her waterfall newly built; methinks we can see her yet, though we saw her but a moment with her big black chain of jet. She wore a hat—a pickle dish—as large as a three cent pie, and we thought we should soon aspire as her big chain rattled by. A score or more of silver doves held her dress from mud and rain, the innocent birds were frightened by the gutta serena chain. Oh, fashion, mistress fashion, have pity on Mary Jane, we love thy tilt and sawdust calves, but take back that jetty chain.—[Ex.]

DIAMONDS—Mother—Here, Tommy,

is some nice ester oil, with orange juice in it.

Doctor—Now, remember, don't give it all to Tommy, leave some for me.
